

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

DONORS: Fox Company reports that Leftists have created a website that maps out donors to the Trump campaign. Although not likely the intention of the site, mapping of political opposition could be used by a more established insurgency to carry out acts of coercion or political violence.

VOTING: A southeastern chapter of the SRA denounced voting as an effective tool to combat alleged fascism. Far Left rhetoric denouncing the efficacy or security of the American electoral process seeks to undermine public confidence in peaceful democratic systems and recruit from disaffected populations fed up with normal political mechanisms.

DOXXING: Far Leftists created and disseminated a spreadsheet of Portland officers with identifying information. The log lists publicly known information--such as rank and badge number. We previously reported that Far Leftists were calling for more organized doxxing of Portland area police that appears to be coming to fruition. Further intelligence gathering of officers' home addresses, family, and off-duty monitoring would indicate an even more advanced intelligence capability.

We really need more experienced abolitionists, anarchists and radicals from larger cities to come help build infrastructure in smaller cities. There's a lot of experience, skills and strategy that it would be good to have brought here.

ANALYST COMMENT: The Far Left proto-insurgency has, so far, been largely reserved to major metropolitan areas. Of note, Far Left violence and riots have erupted in smaller towns, but have typically fizzled out--likely lacking the logistic support necessary for sustained unrest. A concerted mutual aid campaign moving into smaller towns would be the first step in building popular support outside of the aforementioned major cities. If successful, it could develop into a more expansive rural logistic network in metropolitan peripheries. Smaller cities could serve as safe havens for urban militants to evade law enforcement and develop their operational capabilities. Of note, sustained insurgencies around the globe often rely on a rural infrastructure to sustain operations against government forces.
